Board Liaison to Award Committees:

Award Description: An award of $1,000 is made to honor outstanding efforts to enhance public understanding of archaeology, in memory of Gene S. Stuart (1930-1993), a writer and managing editor of National Geographic Society books. The award is given to the author of the most interesting and responsible original story or series about any archaeological topic published in a newspaper or magazine.

Who Is Eligible to Submit Nominations or Apply for the Award: The award is given to single or multiple authored articles, stories, or series of stories published in newspapers or magazines. The emphasis is on publications available to the general public (rather than limited distribution newsletters), and online publications are not excluded. The award honors good writing that brings awareness of archaeology to the public eye. Nominations can be submitted by authors themselves, by magazine/newspaper editors, or by readers. Authors or newspaper editors will work with the committee chair to assemble and submit a nomination file. Awardees may be members or non-members of the SAA.

Nomination/Submission Materials Required: Nominators will work with the committee chair to assemble a nomination file that will include the nominated article, which should have been published within the calendar year of 2016. An author/newspaper editor may submit no more than five stories or five articles from a series. Nomination packets may be submitted electronically as PDFs via email to the committee chair. If submitting hard copies, six copies of each entry must be submitted by the author or an editor of the newspaper.

Nomination/Submission Deadline: January 8, 2017

Other Special Requirements: None

Selection or Evaluation Criteria: The Gene S. Stuart Award is given to the author of the most interesting and responsible original story/series about any archaeological topic published in a newspaper or magazine. The story/series should adhere to the guidelines of the Principles of Archaeological Ethics as outlined by the Society for American Archaeology.

Committee Deliberation Process (e.g. dates, venue): After award requirements and deadline information are distributed to journalists and editors via the SAA web and by the Media Relations Committee, the committee chair collects submissions up to the submission deadline, and sends the submissions to the award committee members. The committee chair communicates electronically evaluation procedures and deadlines to committee members. The committee meets electronically to evaluate submissions after the deadline has passed. The committee members evaluate submissions, rank them, and explain their rationale for their rankings. Based on the recommendations of the chair, the committee members and the ex officio journalist member, the chair makes the decision as to who gets the award.

Nature of Award (e.g. monetary, medal, symposium): The awardee receives $1,000. In addition, the awardee is recognized by the SAA through a plaque presented during the business meeting held at the Annual Meeting, a citation in The SAA Archaeological Record, and acknowledgment on the awards page of the SAA Website.

Awardees

2016 Tamara Stewart (American Archaeology Magazine)

Tamara Stewart, the Southwest Projects Coordinator for the Archaeological Conservancy and Assistant Editor for American Archaeology Magazine, has earned the 2016 Gene S. Stuart Award for her ethically responsible and original story about the rush to recover archaeological materials being exposed by melting ice due to global warming. As the planet warms, many of the artifacts that have been protected by the ice for thousands of years are now being exposed and thus deteriorating quickly. "Archeology in the Ice Patches" presents an engaging story about how archaeologists working in the American West and Canada are trying to preserve the past in this rapidly changing environment. Tamara Stewart has delivered to the public a well-balanced article detailing the pursuit of the past in a way that all archaeologists can respect.
